Going the extra mile for the customer

A month or so ago, one of my OG advertisers in this publication, Kevin Simons of America's Mattress, offered up a great story idea.

Unfortunately, the timing didn't work out for that feature.

I probably could have come up with something on my own, but Kevin went the extra mile and pitched another idea—profiling an interesting Skye Canyon resident, interior designer Jill Thomson. He mentioned she has worked with an impressive list of clients, including Floyd Mayweather Jr., Don King, and Kenny Rogers.

He even connected me with her to get the ball rolling.

The interesting part came when I asked Thomson how she knows Kevin.

She said she had purchased a mattress on Amazon, but it wasn't what she was looking for and had to go through the return process.

"I called Amazon and they said to just return it," she said. "How am I supposed to return it? I can't even lift it."

Eventually, she managed to return the mattress—but then faced a new dilemma: she had no mattress to sleep on.

She went to a local mattress store and met Kevin.

"He was amazing," she said. "He was very calming and listened to me. He showed me exactly what I was looking for."

Kevin had a new mattress delivered the same day, and, suffice it to say, Thomson got a good night's sleep.

"Right then, I decided I was going to use him for all my jobs," Thomson said. "So when my clients tell me they need a bed, I tell them, 'I've got a guy.'"

The two have developed a friendship ever since.

That's one way I come up with stories for this publication. Another is by posting on a couple of Skye Canyon Facebook pages, asking if people know—or are—someone who would make an interesting feature.

That's how I met Linda Tompkins and Adriana Garcia. Tompkins reached out to tell me about their toy collectibles business.

She mentioned they would have a booth at Skye Canyon Fit Fest, where I was able to meet them both and see their impressive display.

I saw them again at a large collectibles show at the Ahern Hotel. You can read their story in this issue as well.

Thomson has interior design skills in her DNA

By Kirk Kern

If you get a chance to see Jill Thomson's Skye Canyon home, it's easy to understand why she's such a sought-after interior designer. But her home doesn't necessarily reflect how her projects ultimately turn out.

That's entirely up to the client.

"Some designers specialize in a particular look, and that's great—they attract clients who want that style," she said. "For me, I'm more solution-driven. I can work with anyone. I listen and draw out what you like, then present what I think you're trying to express. I make your home look the way you want it to look."

Thomson has carved out her own niche in the industry, with more than 30 years of experience. She got an early start—her father was a designer who also owned furniture stores.

Her client list spans coast to coast and includes Floyd Mayweather Jr., Don King, executives with the Las Vegas Raiders and the president of homebuilder D.R. Horton. She also worked with Kenny Rogers, whom she said had a great eye for design.

Despite working with high-profile clients, most of her projects are more under the radar.

"I work in Vegas, but I have clients from California to Florida," Thomson said. "I even have a couple of projects in Belize right now."

Her business is built almost entirely on referrals and repeat clients. Thomson said she forms strong relationships by carefully listening and tailoring each design to fit her clients' tastes.

"It's quite an intimate process," she said. "You really get to know your client. Sometimes a husband and wife don't agree or have different tastes, and you almost become a mediator."

"I feel like I've created great friendships with my clients. Sometimes they buy a second home, keep me on for the next project, or refer me to friends."

Thomson grew up in Northern California before moving to Utah. She attended the University of Utah intending to become a doctor, but when her father became ill, she joined the family furniture business and pursued interior design. She opened her own firm in 2010.

"I grew up in the furniture industry," she said. "My roles as an interior designer, furniture buyer and showroom owner helped me develop lasting relationships with many of the finest companies and people in the industry."

Her family owned a furniture store in Salt Lake City, later adding a showroom in St. George, Utah, before opening in Las Vegas. Thomson moved to Las Vegas 28 years ago and has lived throughout the valley. She relocated to Skye Canyon in 2023.

"I came out here just to check it out, and I loved it," she said. "I love how close it is to the mountains. I can walk outside the gate and see snow-capped peaks—it reminds me of Utah."

She also enjoys being able to walk to the community center, Pilates classes and a nearby coffee shop. She's also a big fan of Smith's.

"It's like no other store in town," she said.

Skye Canyon couple turn hobby into a business

By Kirk Kern

Skye Canyon residents Linda Tompkins and Adriana Garcia have spent more than 10 years collecting pop-culture blind-box figures, Pokémon and anime trading cards, and other limited-run toys.

They scoured the internet, visited collectible shows, and built up an extensive collection. Eight months ago, they decided to shift from being customers to starting their own business.

They sold off most of their personal collection and launched Vault Room Toys.

"My wife and I started Vault Room Toys after realizing how big—and under served—the local hobby community really was," Tomkins said. "We specialize in pop-culture collectibles, primarily blind-box figures, Pokémon cards, anime trading cards, and limited-run toys. We work with both collectors and businesses.

"Our latest corporate project was a collaboration with the MGM Grand, where we helped create 120 custom Chinese New Year Zimomo figures (giant Labubu displays) for four of their properties here in town."

Tompkins and Garcia both work full-time in law enforcement but still find time to set up shop at numerous collectible shows, including the Un-Rivaled Toys Cards Comics Show at the Ahern Hotel from April 17–19. They also had a booth at the recent Skye Canyon Fit Fest. In April, they organized their own event—the Total Eclipse Cards and Collectible Show—held April 11 at the Desert Breeze Community Center.

"Both my wife and I are law enforcement officers, so serving the community has always been a major part of our lives," Tompkins said. "In many ways, Vault Room Toys became an extension of that. People know us as collectors, but they also recognize us from our roles in the community, which makes it easier to connect in a more relaxed environment—and it's been nothing but positive.

"We wanted to create a space where people could gather, talk, trade, and connect over shared interests."

Their first event in April drew

Skye Canyon to honor, assist veterans at Patriotic Car Parade

Rarely does a long line of Las Vegas traffic deserve cheers, so circle May 23 on your calendars.

That's the date of the seventh annual Patriotic Car Parade that will start and end at Skye Canyon Park — and in between provide an opportunity to showcase love of country and honor veterans who paid the ultimate price.

There is a $10 charge to enter a vehicle in the parade, with funds raised benefitting the Kline Veterans Fund, a charity that focuses on veterans housing issues. Participants, who will receive a commemorative event pin, are encouraged to decorate their vehicles in red, white, and blue and bring lots of spirit.

Everyone else is invited to watch the parade, which will start to assemble at 9 before stepping off at 10:15, after colors are presented by the Nellis Air Force Base Honor Guard.

“Events like the Skye Canyon Patriotic Parade bring our community together in support of veterans and military families,” said Stephanie Helms, Kline Veterans Fund executive director. “Over Memorial Day weekend, that support carries added meaning as we honor and remember those who gave their lives in service to our country.”

Helms' point deserves repeating:

While Memorial Day has evolved into the unofficial kickoff of summer, it has a solemn history that dates to just after the Civil War.

Communities across the United States started honoring fallen soldiers by decorating their graves with flowers — a practice that became known as “Decoration Day.” The first national day of remembrance took place in 1868, when thousands decorated graves at the then-new Arlington National Cemetery. In 1971 Memorial Day was officially designated a federal holiday to be celebrated on the last Monday in May.

Activities will continue on May 23 at Skye Canyon Park following the parade with a live DJ, face painting, and inflatables, plus food from Honey Bear Bakery and Chick-fil-A.

A registration form and more information can be found at skyecanyon.com/parade.

GOOD FOR WHAT ALES YOU: The Able Baker Brewing Co. Bomb Shelter brew pub and restaurant at 6371 Centennial Center Blvd. is expected to debut in May, with an invite-only opening preceding the official launch.

The new venue follows an extensive remodel of the space formerly occupied by Montana Meat Co., which closed at the end of 2025 after 20 years. Able Baker Brewing already operates a location in the Las Vegas Arts District.

more than 100 vendors and about 1,200 attendees.

The business has grown from simply selling collectibles to wholesaling them to other vendors.

“We take a very personalized approach to helping people build collections, source hard-to-find products, supply wholesale to local shops, and bring corporate projects to life,” Tompkins said. “We’ve built business connections overseas with suppliers in China, Japan, and Thailand. That allows us to work with individuals looking for something nostalgic, all the way up to bulk orders for displays and themed events. Our goal is to eventually open a storefront and host our own themed night market events to bring families and the community together.”

For Tompkins and Garcia, the business is less about selling toys and more about connecting with people and helping create memories. Tompkins said many of their customers are adults rediscovering their childhood, parents bonding with their children, or new collectors entering the hobby.

“For new collectors, we take the time to answer questions and educate them,” she said. “We spend a lot of time helping people learn how to spot counterfeit items, avoid scams, and determine value based on factors like condition. We try to make everyone feel comfortable and keep that community-first mindset in everything we do. It truly is a passion project.”

The couple moved to Skye Canyon in 2016, during the community’s first phase.

“We know all our neighbors,” Tompkins said. “A lot of us have been here since Phase One. We have little mini block parties.”

Foster families always have great, honest stories to tell

By Kimberly McGee

It's spring, a season of growth and fresh starts. Sometimes that brings the kind of change that asks more of us than we expected.

Every May we talk to local foster families who share their everyday stories that don't often make headlines but shape lives in the biggest ways. This year, we're widening that lens and talking directly with teens who are aging out of the system. Often without the safety net of family many of us take for granted, these teens are standing at that complicated edge between childhood and independence.

Their stories are honest, hopeful. Sometimes hard to hear. Always important.

What strikes me every single year is this: without fail, after we publish this issue, my inbox fills with messages from people asking, "How can I help?" And just as consistently, I'm reminded how many ways there actually are that are far beyond fostering. From mentorship and tutoring to supporting organizations, offering job opportunities, or simply showing up consistently for a child who needs it, our community shows up in ways that matter.

I'm excited for you to see that side of Las Vegas again this May in the latest issue of Vegas Family Insider. We shine a light on the helpers, the advocates, the people making a difference every day.

We're also fully entering my personal era of teen milestones.

Which brings me to something I am decidedly less emotionally prepared for: my teens learning to drive this summer.

I know, I know. It's exciting. Independence! Freedom! One step closer to adulthood.

But also... have you seen traffic lately?

So alongside this issue, we're leaning into what parents are already thinking about: how to keep our teens safe and confident behind the wheel. We're launching a summer series on teen driving with insights from local driving schools and experts, real, practical advice that goes beyond the handbook.

Because if we're doing this (and

Build your child's language and emotional health by narrating your own life

By Courtney Singer

Sometimes adults don't know what to say to children, so they say nothing.

Sometimes adults don't understand what children are saying, so they say nothing.

How about if you just said everything!

The narrator of a story gives insight into the character's motivations, ideas, and thought life.

You can be the narrator of your own story by speaking out loud your motivation ideas and thought life. And you get to be the main character.

It's as simple as saying out loud:

"I am thinking about going to the grocery store together after nap".

Now the child knows that there may be an activity after nap and that you will be going together. How lovely to be included in the plan.

Young children have very little agency, very little choice in where they are moved throughout the day. They may fall asleep for nap and wake up in a completely different place.

As adults that would be disconcerting. When the child is included in the plan they feel more secure.

As adults we plan our day. Even at work we are usually given an agenda before a meeting so that we can know when the breaks will be and what topics to prepare for.

Living Grace Homes assists expectant mother in need

215News

A few miles from where you live, a woman is trying to figure out what comes next.

She is pregnant. She does not have a safe place to sleep tonight, and most shelters in the valley cannot take her due to limited beds for pregnant women.

Living Grace Homes is where she finds a place to begin again.

Founded in Las Vegas in 2007 by Kathleen Miller, Living Grace Homes is a residential program that takes in pregnant and parenting women who have nowhere else to go. Residents receive a bed, warm meals, and individualized case management that addresses their actual needs. The 5 pillars of care for LGH are medical care, legal needs, education, employment, and benefits. The program also focuses on building life skills, including financial literacy, nutrition, and parenting. Staff plant the seeds of independence even when they don't get to see them bloom. The goal is not just to get through the pregnancy. It is to come out the other side with the tools to stay stable, with a plan, a path to employment, and the ability to raise her child in a safe environment.

More than 900 young women have walked through the doors of Living Grace Homes. Today, they are growing to meet an even greater need, helping women of all ages to become empowered mothers of our community.

This moment of expansion comes as Founder Kathleen Miller has been named the 2026 Nevada Mother of Achievement by the American Mothers Nevada Association, in recognition of her nearly two decades of serving mothers and their babies in Southern Nevada.

Living Grace Homes currently serves about 10 women at a time, and the need for emergency shelter far surpasses their capacity. The organization is working toward the Safe & Sound Campus in Henderson, adding 38 additional beds to our program, so more mothers and babies have a safe place to go.

This is where the community becomes part of the story.

This May, there are two simple ways to help.

The first is a tribute gift. Through the Living Grace Homes Tribute Tree, you can give in honor of your mom or any mother who has shaped your life. It is a way to mark the holiday that means something beyond a card or a gift card, and the person you honor will know you did it to help mothers in need.

The second is a direct gift and right now, a $20,000 matching grant is active through the end of May. That means a $50 gift becomes $100. A $100 gift becomes $200. The match is real, it is time-limited, and it goes directly toward expanding the number of mothers and babies Living Grace Homes can serve.

If you are looking to make a local impact you can see and feel, this is it.

More moms. More miracles. And it starts with YOU.

Make a tribute gift at LivingGraceHomes.org/tributetree

Give directly and learn more at LivingGraceHomes.org/moremoms.

We know that our physical needs will be met and we know that we can be prepared so that our emotions can be stable.

When you narrate your life you are helping the child learn how to make decisions and weigh options. At the same time you are providing language for experiences and emotions.

If after nap you decide not to go to the grocery store together if might go something like this: "I thought about it, and we have enough food in the fridge for two more days. Let's go to the park instead". Now the child has heard language for reasoning and felt the flexibility of changing the plan.

Here is a funny story that I heard about a fussy girl in the shopping cart and her mom narrating her way through the experience:

As her daughter fussed the mom calmly said, "It's okay Jessica we only have two more aisles to go and then we can go home and have a nap."

A grandfather was in the next aisle over and heard the child fussing and was impressed with the calm way that the mom was narrating the experience to her daughter.

At the next aisle it went the same. As her daughter fussed the mom calmly said, "It's okay Jessica we only have one more aisle to go and then we can go home and have a nap."

In the parking lot the grandfather approached the mom and daughter. He said, "You are doing such a great job helping Jessica makes sense of the world and speaking to her so calmly."

The mom replied, "I'm Jessica, this is my daughter Veronica."

Narration works for all ages!

We're also creating something I wish existed when I was younger, teen job fairs at Flex Learning Studio. A place where teens can meet local businesses, learn how to get that first job, and start building confidence, responsibility, and real-world skills. It's one of those full-circle moments: supporting teens in foster care who need opportunity, while also helping all of our teens take those first steps into independence.

May's issue is a mix of stories that remind you what matters and resources that help you navigate what's next.

If you've ever wondered how to help, this is your issue.

And if you're currently griping the passenger seat while your teen practices a turn, just know you're not alone.
